Location, area, geographical conditions

Košický kraj, with an area of 6,754.3 km², is located in the southeastern part of Slovakia and covers 13.8% of the Slovakia territory. It is the fourth largest region in Slovakia by the area. To the south, it borders the Republic of Hungary, to the east, Ukraine, to the north, the Prešovský kraj, and to the west, the Banskobystrický kraj.

The highest point in the region is the Stolica peak in the Stolické vrchy mountain range, reaching an elevation of 1,476.5 meters, while the lowest point is the bank of the Bodrog river at the border with Hungary, at 93.7 meters above sea level. The watercourses in the region are lowland, hilly, and mid-mountain rivers. The largest river is the Bodrog, which, along with its tributaries, drains the easternmost part of the region. The Hornád river and its tributaries drain the Hornádska kotlina and Košická kotlina basins, the Slaná river drains the western part, and the Tisa river flows through the southeastern tip of the territory. Significant water reservoirs include Zemplínska šírava, Bukovec, Ružín, Palcmanská Maša, and Dobšiná. Forests cover two-fifths of the region's area, with the most densely forested district in Slovakia, Gelnica, having up to three-quarters of its territory covered by forests. The region's forests are mainly found in the mountainous and foothill areas of the northern and southwestern parts of the region. In the southeast, there are floodplain forests, while the eastern and southern parts have a lowland and hilly character. The region lies in the northern temperate zone, with average annual temperatures around 10°C at selected meteorological stations. The northern parts are cooler, while the southeast can reach temperatures close to inland subtropical regions.

The region is rich in ore, non-ore, and energy raw materials. Among the ore resources, significant deposits of iron and silver ores are found in the Rožňava and Spišská Nová Ves districts. Notable are the magnesite deposits around Košice, salt in the Michalovce district, as well as talc and gypsum in the Rožňava and Spišská Nová Ves districts. Various types of building stone, brick clay, limestone, kaolin, sand and gravel, and other materials are found in the region. Energy raw materials include oil and natural gas in the Michalovce and Trebišov districts. Notable geothermal springs are located in the Košická kotlina basin in the Ďurkov area and in the foothills of Vihorlat mountain. The Košická kotlina basin is one of the most promising areas for the use of geothermal energy, with water temperatures of 150°C expected at a depth of 3,000 meters.

In territory of Košický kraj lie 2 national parks: Národný park Slovenský raj and Národný park Slovenský kras, 2 protected landscape areas – Latorica and Vihorlat, 29 national nature reserves, 49 nature reserves, 23 national natural monuments, 26 natural monuments, 11 protected areas and 10 protected bird areas. The Dobšinská ľadová jaskyňa ice cave and the geyser in Herľany are unique natural monuments of European significance. Other unique sites include the caves Ochtinská aragonitová jaskyňa, Domica, Jasovská a Gombasecká jaskyňa.

The region consists of four historical regions: Spiš, Gemer, Abov, and Zemplín. Each of them still maintains its own traditions, customs, and folk literature.

According to the territorial administrative division in accordance with the Act of the National Council of the Slovak Republic No. 221/1996 Coll., the region is divided into 11 districts: Gelnica, Košice I, Košice II, Košice III, Košice IV, Košice-okolie, Michalovce, Rožňava, Sobrance, Spišská Nová Ves, and Trebišov. The smallest district, Košice III, has an area of 16.8 km², while the largest, Košice-Okolie, covers 1,534.6 km².

The region has 440 municipalities, 17 of which have town status. Nearly 53% of the region's population lives in towns. Košice is the administrative, economic, political, educational, and cultural centre of the region. It is the second-largest city in Slovakia, consisting of 22 city districts with their own local self-government. At the end of 2023, nearly 226 thous. residents lived in Košice, representing 29% of the regional population.

Demographic background

By the end of 2023, the population of the Košice Region was 779,073, making up 14.4% of the total population of Slovakia. The region is among the more densely populated regions, with an average of 115 people per square kilometer. The four districts within Košice city are densely populated, while the districts of Sobrance, Rožňava, and Gelnica are much less densely populated.

Although more people were born (7,908) than died (7,622) in 2023, the total population declined by 432 persons, due to a migration loss of 718 people.
